"The largest mobilization of warships in all history was certainly that accomplished by Xerxes before the battle of Salamis. According to the detailed figures given by Harodotus, he mustered 1267 hattleships—triremes or ships of war with three banks of oars. Each of these carried a crew of 200 rowers and 30 fighting men. There were also 3000 smaller vessels of war and transports, averaging 80 men each. A further 120 triremes afterward joined. Herodotus may even have understated the figures, since Aeschylus gives 1207 triremes as the number present at the battle, and 647 had already been lost or destroyed."

There was heavy fighting at Marchiennes Thursday morning when the Germans broke through the French line. The allies acquitted themselves well, however, and succeeded in pushing the German advance forces back on their main body. The German advance forces were also repulsed at Pont-A-Marcq.

Germans Occupy Valenciences.

"There was also fighting at Touraine where the Germans were repulsed. It is believed here that the Germans have occupied Valenciennes but the British are reported to have driven back the enemy near Mons.

"There is nothing to indicate that the allies" line from Mons to Conde has been seriously turned.

"French industrial centers such as Rouhsix and Turceing are frequently tisited by German cavalry and are occupied and evacuated every day."

Expect Enveloping Attack.

The Times military correspondent, in discussing the situation on the French frontier, says:

The news that the allies have retired to the line from Lecatean to Cambrai shows that active defonce of the line from Lille to Maubeauge has been abandoned and that these two forty-sase have been left temporarily to look after themselves.

'If the line is assimily defended it should be most difficult to penetrate Laferne, Laon and Rheims, which are provided with permanent fortifications, but we are not at that point yet.

'The line from Lecatean to Cambrai must expect an enveloping attack in the north, but this attempt will probably fail.

Must Win or Retreat.

Must Wis or Refrest.

"We have every right to expect victory today, but if we don't wis a decisive victory, we must abandon our bases on the coast morth of the mouth of the Semme and shift further south, either to Havre or Cherbourg.

"If we are unable to resume the offensive and beat back the German attack from the north, one consequence will be that the Germans will establish already stations along the straits of Dover and thereby be able to keep us under constant cheervation.

Says German Guns Ineffective.

A Reuter dispatch from Paris says a French Zouare officer, who has returned wounded from the front, describes some of his impressions. "My regiment," he said, "took part in the fighting around Charlerot, where the German imperisi guard suffered very suverely. I was surprised at the lack of effectiveness of the German artillery. Their shells when they burst produced a series of istriffic explosions but did comparatively little damage. The soldiers guickly perceiving that the chief characteristic of the shells was noise, soon got accustomed to them.

"On the other hand, the French artillery fire had a deadly effect and its accuracy was little short of marvelous. For instance, I saw a German battery appearing in the distance, but seen hefore it could unlimber it was destroyed by the French fire.

Asked as to his opinion of the value of the German troops, the officer said: of the German troops the officer said:
German Bravery Wonderful.
Their bravery is wonderful, especially that of the imperial guard, which did not flinch before the most murderous fire. On the other hand, the morale of the French troops is splendid. They are not the least disheariened by the temporary check and I am convinced that if they are well led they will achieve wonders."
